

tion discovers that chastity is necessary to his ideal being, and so he cultivates forces which are purely psychic and which are destined eventually to supplant his former modes of sexual selection.

Let us say a young man of remarkable personality meets a young woman of the same qualities, and let us say that he has cultivated the highest human traits. Suppose they are attracted to one another as are two chemical atoms. He discovers her to be unfit for the highest human calling, motherhood. Would such a highly cultivated young man marry such a young woman? No.

The same laws operated in attracting these two people together as in all organic nature, but the human psychic qualities repelled them from one another.

In human society true love must be the manifestation of the highest qualities the race has acquired. It must not only be the selection by nature of two suitable couples to bring children of healthy bodies into the world; it must also be man's selection of a fit partner to train and take care of the children who come into the world. In the relation of the sexes in human society the male and female must essentially be soulmates. For they have to live a life of companionship and not merely leave nature to select blindly for them.

Love calls the individual to his universal consecration only when nature mated them and the parties concerned approved of nature's choice. True love is psychological and not biological. Under normal conditions of choice true relationship and companionship enables men and women to transmit the highest and best qualities and preserve these qualities after they have been transmitted.—Sam Druck.

CLEAN.—In order to clean up the city and help to keep it clean in every sense of the word we must all read The Day Book, as this spotless little journal is never found littering our streets and alleys like other papers, or is it ever found polluting its news columns and besmearing the public's eyes with mud in order to blind them from seeing the good clean truth of things.

So the cleanest people in a clean city all read our cleanest paper, The Day Book.—Jas. O. Boy.

TEACHERS HOLD JOLLY MEET WHILE JAKE SULKS

After whipping Jacob Loeb in the appellate court, the union teachers of Chicago met yesterday afternoon in the Masonic Temple to discuss their success.

Happy speeches were in order and credit for the fight was tossed between Margaret Haley, Att'y I. T. Greenacre and Victor Olander of the Federation of Labor.

Jacob Loeb, father of the rule which the appellate court enjoined the board from enforcing, admitted his disappointment in the failure to crush the teachers of the city schools.

"But we'll take the matter to the court of last resort," he declared, just like Jacob Loeb.
